Summary of scientific research

Pozzo is a philosopher with a background in logic and philosophy of science. His approach relies on the use of concept modeling for textual content documentation and elaboration. During his tenure at CNR, he pushed forward the participation of Italy to the European research infrastructures for social sciences and humanities CESSDA, CLARIN, DARIAH, EHRI, ERIHS, ESS, OPERAS, RESILIENCE, and SHARE. His research is focused on reflection and inclusion as societal processes that shape our understanding of what cultural innovation stands for. Tackling epistemological challenges related to humanities-led cross-disciplinary issues such as human-centered artificial intelligence, happiness and well-being, he aims at a change in the mindset as regards target groups active in social infrastructures such as education, life-long learning, healthcare, urban development and regeneration. The focus is on the introduction of the notion of cultural innovation, which requires adapting the process of co-creation. Pozzo has made an unprecedented attempt in pointing out processes and outcomes of cultural innovation while showing their operationalization in empirical case studies.
